Dear Dr Greenspan,

Thank you for your enquiry. We are currently engaged on a digitisation project of our photo and document archives. Amongst the images we have scanned to date are the two images attached below. Apart from these we may have a few historical engravings such as haggadot illustrations, but no further photographs.

Page 262 'Men and Women of Mark in Modern Judea' album of newspaper cuttings (1897-1905) compiled by E de Haas. Contains two cuttings: cutting headed 'The Manufacture of Passover Flour' containing photograph of East Mills, Colchester (Messrs Marriage and Sons Ltd); cutting containing photograph of workers. 1900 image file: C 1997.1.p262_0262

However, I recall further images from the collection of the Hulton Picture Library in London (Getty Images) where I used to work. Handmade matzahs being manufactured in London around 1930. ref HD6944 and A young Jewish woman and two girls stand outdoors smiling at each other, carrying boxes of matzoth for Passover, Columbia Street, New York City, 1933. ref JK8952, jpeg files attached

We recently visited the Jewish Museum in Amsterdam were they have made a feature in their educational galleries on matza production and have a wonderful photo of the De Haan matza factory from 1916, as well as packet designs of Hollandia Matzes.

The Manufacture of Passover Flour

HOW MATZOS ARE MADE.

PASSOVER AT THE HOSPITALS.

Bedder at the London Hospital.

The "bedder" of the great hospital in the Whitechapel Road presented an interesting and bright scene as we followed under the narrow passages in the ward. The sick, but the poor, will always be with us, and while it is impossible for health to come from that side, we may yet endeavor to ease their pain and sorrow. For many years past, before the late war, the Jewish patients of the London Hospital for several years a hundred and some patients, almost a larger patient, visited the service, and now a
